In 1971, Debapras continued his work on a search algorithm for a digital computer and published a number of articles on the formulation of the classification problem and on classification based on binary data [5]. In 1973, he published a fundamental monograph on the principles of classification based on binary numbers and computational logic[6]. He was also one of the first scientists to use binary numbers to play chess[7]. His next book, Controlled Crawling Machine, came out in 1977 and became famous for its illustrations. Today, the book is a classic for engineers and students dedicated to the development of robotics. The book "Methods for Recognizing Complexity". Russian edition (M.: Mir, 1981).
