User interface: The user interfaces of AutoCAD, which was previously available as separate CAD program products, are all free and are available as part of the "AutoCAD" software package. In addition to drawing capabilities, AutoCAD features powerful command-line and scripting tools for users who prefer the command-line interface. Sketching: Sketches are quickly and easily created by dragging objects and other AutoCAD functions. Drawing: Once the drawing is complete, editing and measurement tools are available. Raster images are supported in AutoCAD: various raster images can be created in AutoCAD with point, line, polygon, circle, arc, ellipse, spline, bezier, and spline curve tools. Note: AutoCAD "Viewer" is a commercial product designed to operate in conjunction with AutoCAD. "Viewer" is not free. The free "AutoCAD LT" is also available. History: The original AutoCAD was written in 1978 by Ken "Dr. K" Hilden, who was also the primary developer of AutoLISP. Because of the complexity of AutoLISP, Dr. K "began to explore the possibility of automating the use of AutoLISP. One day he was experimenting with command line processing to see if he could write a 'hybrid' program that would use both command line and AutoLISP. This resulted in a program called AutoCAD that automatically generated AutoLISP code to be used by AutoCAD. With a big community of AutoLISP users, Dr. K was able to evolve AutoCAD from a primitive 'Hybrid' to the full-fledged AutoCAD we know today." The original AutoCAD used the IBM/360 character-based virtual memory management scheme, but the first release of AutoCAD software used 8-bit microprocessors. Since that time, AutoCAD has been ported to a variety of architectures, including the PDP-11/70, the VAX-11/780, the x86-based Motorola 68000 series, and the MIPS architecture. The user interface was originally written in BASIC, but was redesigned in 1985 using the MacCAD 2.0 framework. AutoCAD was available as a closed-source application with a "

Windows API, provided by the Microsoft Visual C++ SDK and Mingw32. History AutoCAD was first released for the Macintosh in 1987. At the time, the application was bundled with a drawing editor from Papercut Software. With the release of AutoCAD 2000 for the Windows platform in 1994, the drawing editor was moved to a separate product. However, as the application became more popular with CAD users, AutoCAD continued to evolve and included various advanced drafting tools. From its initial release on the Macintosh platform in 1987, AutoCAD also evolved to support many file formats including DWG, DGN, PDF, DXF, PLT, and a native native workspace file format known as ANI. In 2007, with the release of AutoCAD LT, the application became focused on the two lower tiers of CAD (Drafting, BIM). The application also changed its file extension to ".dwg" to clearly reflect this change. In 2009, the Autodesk Exchange Apps store was introduced, allowing for third-party applications to be automatically updated on users' computers. AutoCAD 2010 added support for the.dwg and.dgn file formats in addition to.dxf,.dwf,.pdf,.dgn, and.plt. In 2013, Autodesk released a modernized user interface and revised licensing and support policies. In 2015, Autodesk made the AutoCAD cloud APIs available for public use. A number of applications are already available. In 2016, Autodesk released AutoCAD Architecture for construction and AutoCAD Electrical for electrical design. I need to get the user name and avatar of the user. I was using $ret = $this->facebook->api('/me'); $user = json_decode($ret); I am getting only the email id of the user, how can i get the user name, id and avatar? Thanks. A: "me" is not the correct endpoint to fetch an user data. I would recommend to use the /me/ endpoint instead. Just like this: $ret = $this->facebook->api('/me/profile'); $user = json_decode($ret); Retrieving the avatar and name is more easy using the // endpoint. You have to pass the fields parameter. That is what you want. Like this: $ret = $this->facebook->api('/me/picture'); $user = json_decode($ret); The field parameter is a comma-separated list of fields to include in the response. For example, to retrieve the name, gender, and email of the
