What's new:

 we unveiled the best bikes of the year, the people who risked life and limb to create a great machine. This year, none of the nominations were easy. There are simple reasons why: Tour de France contenders and teams tested their bikes on different kinds of mud, the racing conditions became more difficult as the season wore on, and there were plenty of reminders that the RC16 is not a bike designed to sit on a desk. In the end, after a long search, we found the best on and off road bikes among the 300 nominations we received, in 15 categories ranging from clinchers to full carbon frames, carbon forks and geometry. There were more than 38,000 votes cast in the 8,000 votes different category. The top ten just barely represent some truly great randonneurs and tourers. We've kept the top ten in each category short and concise, though we'll present the full list of nominations and winners in Sunday's print edition of Trail Bum. – Marc Liberatore, Editor Individual Bike of the Year Poll 2018 has been too short a season. Who wouldn't want the heat of the Tour de France to pour into their veins at the end of an action-filled winter? Not even the base temperature of the enamel on the down tube should be too high, because a rider may suffer in mid-race. It's an important year of the Tour, and we have the Gavia and the Oltre XR about to go up against each other and two other bikes. One is always ahead, no matter which pursuit they win, and the other is always behind, no matter which pursuit they lose. The winner may not be the fastest, but it's the one with the best time trial skills. For 2018 you have to support Movistar, Trek, Giant and Giro d'Italia-Segafredo, because they all filled our 26-year-old team, Astana, with action-packed races, and for them we did twice as much as for others. So here are the best bikes in the
