Moreover, this attitude will cause the individual to lose self-confidence, adaptability and innovativeness when the individual has exhausted their career, and this will cause serious harm to the individual and the family when they are facing physical or mental illness. Hence, the education and management of health personnel is needed to correct the negative attitude and behavior caused by the lack of prestige. 6. Conclusion {#sec6}

===== The medical services in the United States of America were ranked higher than those of other countries. The urban medical services in China are richer and stronger than the rural medical services. The motivations of the urban medical services are higher than those of the rural medical services. The medical services in Shanghai, Wuhan, and Guangzhou are all ranked high, and the reasons for the high level are related to the concept of prestige. In the past decades, the medical services in China have developed rapidly. China as a whole is still in the process of economic development; thus, the medical services in China need further development. The government should establish a strong mechanism to balance the relative strength between the medical services in urban areas and the medical services in rural areas, and the relative strength between medical service institutions in urban and rural areas; in addition, the government should establish a mechanism to enforce the relative strength between medical services d41b202975
