Modern Implements Made in America Monday, October 11, 2018 In the name of progress, there is a counter-culture of sorts that has taken root in our local craft economy. A rather narrow slice of crafts, like pottery and woodworking, may be assembled here, on a small scale, but then sold around the country to middle class consumers. The amount of resources necessary to supply a hand-crafted product, however, far exceeds the scale and resources of a large establishment. The small-scale artisanal supply chain demands excellence, and it's hard to overestimate the crucial role of technical knowledge in creating quality products. As impressive as the equipment at these shops are, the creative thinking that must go into making them, I suggest, far surpass their technologies in complexity. The salient question is what exactly can be done today that couldn't be done ten years ago. Alder/Douglas Alder/Douglas, Craftsman, Beech, etc. That's because craft moves forward on its own, in constant circles of technical improvement, driven by the desire to improve yourself and create a better product. If any of these activities (pottery, woodworking, weaving, glass, jewelry making, etc.) is less than a hundred years old, than it was mostly about technical advance. While it probably didn't take long to figure out that china glaze in the eighties was best, the material itself took years to invent. If you build a business around service, you have to be constantly improving your knowledge. Every day the plane is a new airplane, every day there's a new dish at a restaurant that's amazing. The more experience you have,

In addition to a significant decline in absolute filarial burden we observed a significant decline in bancroftian filarial morbidity. It is not possible to quantify the impact of this decline to the loss of life years and disability adjusted life years (DALYs) prevention. However, our results clearly demonstrate that this has indeed occurred. The fact that ~25,000-35,000 new cases of lymphatic filariasis and while, at the time of reporting, only 4080-6300 cases were already on treatment to reach a MDA Impact level of reduction of 75%, that the target of achieving LF elimination before 2020 has been successfully achieved, including global and regional status, demonstrates that the MDA program was effective in reducing disease burden \[*[@pntd.0005579.ref009],[@pntd.0005579.ref027],[@pntd.0005579.ref028]**\]. Although these are difficult measurements to be able to accurately capture, it is important to remember that the filarial diseases; dirofilariasis and lymphatic filariasis, especially nowadays with the advent of community based MDA and the reduction of blood donation frequency, are best conceived of as an important health achievement that help to complement our efforts to achieve full immunization. In this context, the notion of lack of Bm12 antibody-defined filariae or even a poor understanding of the association of filarial infections that can impair immunogenicity such as the lack of exposure and susceptibility from repeated exposure to microfilariae on the one hand and, on the other hand from clinical signs and symptoms that may not necessarily reflect infection or even precede the disease process, have led to conceptually misplaced filariae-to-disease-to-nodule concepts in the absence of a complete understanding of the concept of immunological signatures and immune responses induced by filarial infections \[*[@pntd.0005579.ref029]**\]. The situation where MDA is not affordable
