What's new:

on reading fanfiction

A few days ago I set myself a goal to read 30 mangas in 30 days. Actually, it is a little more of a challenge than that. I don't use a scheduler and there were some days I was not sure if I was going to be able to stick to that amount. (I was working at the time and I had a lot of free time.) But at the end of the month I made it to 30 and I am glad I gave myself that challenge. I read everything I could and had the chance to connect with many new people, to discuss many things and to share my own opinions on lots of topics.

Usually I feel more comfortable reading fanfiction than I do reading real things. I have read fan-made stories, online stories and my own.

I have discovered a lot of talented authors in the last two months and there are still more I want to read. All in all, I am quite happy with how my 30 days went!

But now the story is over...

The main reason I started writing fanfiction is because of my understanding of how the game industry works. I am not writing about how fanfiction is bad, or how it should not be used. There are plenty of people out there to do that already. Instead, I want to share what I have learned from the short time I have had to explore the potential and the flaws of this online medium.

So, what about my 30 days?

My first experience with writing fanfiction was when I first met Naito

"...There are many horrible ways to develop cancer, but this is not among them." Over the last 5 years, we've seen more and more cases of lymphoma diagnosed in extremely rare kinds of animals. In the UK, the usual suspects for lymphoma are ones that infect your body's immune system. Examples include cats, dogs, marine mammals, and horses. Now our friends at the Australian Veterinary Association are warning that a very rare kind of giraffe is on the rise in Australia. They say that male giraffes have been found to be testing positive for the disease. Normally, these large land animals don't have to worry about a virus, because they have a specific kind of immune system that protects them. However, there is one very, very rare kind of giraffe that does deal with the equivalent of chicken pox - an animal version of this is known as shingles. Showing that sudden loss of feeling is a sign of shingles, says the AVMA And when it occurs in giraffes, AVMA says that they can then test positive for shingles. This side effect means that if giraffes have shingles or if they exhibit the loss of feeling
