What's new:

If you've read my Wake Up and Dream series, you'll know I don't know how to play guitar. I love it, I've got nothing against it, but I lack that talent. All of my other drawings were done with my trusty Cintiqs. After I'd got started, I went on to get a couple other high-quality markers and pens to fill out my toolset. BK-057 I had a Santa's Little Helper Pot of Paint. Cintiq keyboard That was all I could get in 2007 until I bought a Cintiq 12WX for a little over $1100 Cintiq 12WX In October 2009, I wanted to explore some new ideas and methods of storytelling. Lidia had gotten her Cintiq earlier that month. I thought she'd be a great artist to watch and maybe some day collaborate with, so when I found out she was doing some story panels, I jumped at the chance. Cintiq and Resolve As time went by, Lidia and I began getting closer. One night after one of our team's meetings, she sat down at my studio, flipped on the Cintiq and said, "Let's try this." From then on we sent out the invitations--one each other and started working on this together. Cintiq and Resolve She emailed me the first page: Cintiq and Resolve As time went on, we met with my best friend (J, the CH editor) to correct and clarify any errors so I could immediately print the panels for review. Sometimes the continuity didn't match up from one drawn page to another, sometimes we skipped around without a plan. Cintiq and Resolve By December 2009, we'd completed the first 6 panels and we printed them out for a "rehearsal" at one of our team meetings. The first panel was pretty rough, but it was clearly getting better. Cintiq and Resolve From then on, we put panels on top of panels, getting better the more we worked together. Then we went from planning to planning to planning. We thought of our characters' relationships, what each of their histories were, where we might go in later panels, and so on. The story was still a little rough

Emily is on a train heading to her college in New York City, where she is going to study law. She is amazed when she discovers that her ticket is only good for one stop, and it has to be at the end. Upon arrival, Emily is set up for her college's commencement, and is put on trial for murder as she faces the judge. Later, Emily is rescued by her roommate Tessa, and is taken to her family's home in the country. Emily changes her mind, and decides to make a career in law, so she can help people in need. As Emily struggles to grasp life in the United States, she encounters unexpected changes. She is trapped in prison and is given a cell at the end of the hall. Another unexpected turn in her life occurs when she is hit by a car, and finds herself awake in an asylum - has she gone insane? Emily meets a nice nurse named Paula in the asylum, who teaches her to navigate the world of the lucid dream. Eventually, Emily is released from the asylum and finds the will to accept life, and she soon becomes a trial attorney. Waking up, Emily must confront the reality
