In a world where magic is a reality, it is nearly impossible to separate the two. It is just a day like any other, until a girl appears in her room. She's beautiful, but she's lost. She's a mage born with an unreliable gift; when she transforms into her angel form, she transforms into a dazzlingly beautiful, otherworldly creature with the ability to break through the very fabric of reality. She's incredibly high-strung and she doesn't trust anyone. By the time she realizes she's a mage, she's already lost someone she cares about. She can't form any sort of meaningful connection with her guardian. She's lonely, lost, and she needs your help. This is the story of Seventh Circle, and Seventh Circle tells her story. Three Things You Need To Know About Seventh Circle The love interest is not your protagonist. It's a visual novel with a strong focus on LGBTQ+ representation, and it contains sensitive content. You can't change your gender. You're only one of three characters, and the main story arcs happen in a different time period than most visual novels. You have to forge ahead without the knowledge you receive. Unlike most visual novels, Seventh Circle features branching plot lines. While in the game you choose one protagonist, who unfolds the story from their perspective, you don't actually play that character. You play a different protagonist at the start of each story, who builds their own arc, choosing who they date and interact with, and possibly eventually end up marrying. This doesn't mean you can't play Seventh Circle as your usual protagonist: all of the character's choices will still be reflected in their relationships, through the game's romantic and sexual encounters. The game ends at the point where you can choose the three main characters to either date or marry. But if you decide you do not want to, you can replay that story, or any others you could have chosen, multiple times as your character. Seventh Circle is a visual novel, with some light roleplay elements. It's not just a romance game. There are three routes, all with unique endings. Each one has its own set of possible endings. The three main characters aren't all canonically friends. In the beginning, you don't know you have the ability to turn into a mage. These three (and you) all meet at later points

" promo. So, why do actors need to be so boring sometimes? Let's make this easy to understand. Billboard recently announced that Mindless Behavior will appear on the season final of the TV show, "American Idol" with their song, "Pick the Lock," that will also be featured on the "Idol" Christmas compilation. I cannot say I'm excited about the song, but I can say that I like how excited it is that they made the song. Billboards has not just made the song; they've hired a cool graphic artist to come up with the mind blowing album artwork that plays up the "Alien-style" look we're all familiar with when we see movies like "Avatar." It is a little petty of me to always complain about Billboards stupid decisions to focus on how they spend 99¢ on promoting a damn song, but I'm a part-time dad and frankly I have more important things to be thinking about... If the idea of the "Pick the Lock" is to gain exposure for their band, then the least they could have done would be to have some common sense and to make a pretty song. I understand that MTV is probably largely responsible for fueling the bad design and graphic design; after all, Kanye West didn't need MTV to tell him to add the ant farm in the middle of the video for his song, "Heartless." Billboards decision to go with this creative vision, as awful as it is, is not as bad as other concepts I've been exposed to. The "Alien" look, the fact that the American Idol girl is sitting on a "retro" style cop car, the American Idol girl sitting on a helicopter while wearing a set of tires, the American Idol girls screaming out of her car, and an alien sitting at the bottom of the car all make me cringe a little. The incredible part of this is that it's not even a great song. "Pick the Lock" is pretty much a pop/rock song that's literally just vocals, a catchy chorus, and a static-y trumpet solo (paraphrased from the song lyrics). Okay, the music video is pretty. It certainly looks cooler than my place, but with it all being the same color, just blended with the whole scene of the girl crashing on top of a cop car, the fact that we have to watch this in sequence makes the video forgettable. To sum up, Billboards not only promoted their stupid song but they
