I created a Convolutional Neural Network using the TensorFlow 2.1 tutorial on GitHub. Then I ran a 100 epochs of training in Kaggle. My output layers are all categorical. So far I've been using dummy labels with cross-entropy to train my CNNs. However, I'd like to make use of Keras's built in functionality to use logistic regression or softmax, rather than cross-entropy. I'd still want my model to maintain its existing weights. What is the easiest way to do this? I've tried the following: Change the activation function of my last layer to softmax and overwrite the weights with new weights for logistic regression. Create a new Sequential model with just the last layer and logistic regression in a separate model, and overwrite the weights in the first model with the new weights. Make a new model with a regression layer after my first model's last layer and overwrite the weights in the first model with the new weights. Use the following code for the loss function: batch_size = 128 nb_train_samples = 30 nb_validation_samples = 10 epochs = 1000 # Note: this is not entirely necessary for the code to work, but # it prevents the model from learning underfitting. learning_rate = 0.000001 # If True, display the
