As the United States struggles to contain the coronavirus pandemic, one of its top priorities is making sure hospitals and nursing homes have enough supplies to help those who suffer. USMEF, the U.S. meat federation, released a list of "top requests" for American meat and poultry companies and federal meat and poultry inspectors. The top priority: Cases of the coronavirus must be banned from entering the food supply, and meat and poultry products must be tested by government inspectors to ensure that they are free from the virus. Other items on the U.S. Meat and Poultry Federation's "top requests" list: • "Recommend that all food served to patients in hospitals be decontaminated or clearly identified as 'not intended for human consumption.'" • "Be banned entry into the poultry and meat supply chain from any country where similar coronavirus cases have been reported." • "Develop testing for products to ensure that these products are safe." "We at U.S. Meat Export Federation, the nation's leading trade association representing U.S. meat and poultry exporters, are working with many of our customers who are affected by this pandemic," President and CEO Thomas A. Bell said in a statement. "Our primary purpose is to make sure the safe shipment of food continues, and to protect the livelihoods of those in the industry who work tirelessly to produce and deliver safe products." A White House task force is reaching out to the agriculture community, USMEF said. The group is working to get information from the meat and poultry industry on what supply chains may need help from the government. The task force includes agricultural leaders as well as economists and health experts. "This is a complex and dynamic situation, and we need input from all stakeholders to develop a coordinated plan to minimize the economic and health impacts of this pandemic on the livestock and poultry industries in the United States," Agriculture Secretary Sonny Perdue said. Overall, it's a good sign that the nation's meat and poultry trade group is reaching out to those who are most impacted by the fast-moving coronavirus. As the number of positive cases in the US has increased and more people are confined to their homes, the coronav bff6bb2d33

Moroft2017-04-19T02:07:11+09:00 You Hate English?, Look Away!

If you work in an English workplace or get into everyday conversations in English, chances are that you tend to hate English. And chances are that you aren't alone. English is the language that every person uses everywhere, and if they don't understand it, they stumble. And if they don't succeed, there is no assurance that the other party does. If you cannot speak it fluently, your unavailability leads to an absence of natural communication, although you are present. It is not too late to change. Anyone can learn it.

Did you know that Japanese has four different pronunciation systems? For example, one in Ky?jitai, one in Kansai

To the Editor, We read with interest the article by Almeida et al. entitled "Early diagnosis of acute coronary syndrome in hospitalised patients in a public hospital in Salvador, Brazil" published in the Revista Brasileira de Cardiologia \[\[@bb0005]\]. We understand the authors' hesitation to classify acute coronary syndrome in hospitalised patients as urgent. However, it is difficult to separate unstable angina from an acute coronary syndrome. The American College of Cardiology (ACC) has proposed a classification scheme that subdivides unclassified chest pain into "atypical" and "typical" \[\[@bb0010]\]. Atypical chest pain can be sub-classified into normal, non-cardiac and cardiac, while typical chest pain is sub-classified into stable angina, unstable angina, and non-ST-elevation myocardial infarction \[\[@bb0010]\]. In their study, the authors observed that most patients met the criteria for acute coronary syndrome/unstable angina. However, it was not possible to identify "Atypical chest pain" in their patients, due to the patients' self-report of chest pain and lack of in-house cardiologist at the institution. This paper adds to the existing literature that emphasises the importance of early diagnosis and treatment of hospitalised patients' chest pain, presenting in the emergency department, even when it is not classified as an acute coronary syndrome. We also thank the authors for publishing the data \[\[@bb0005]\], which will help promote early diagnosis. The authors are to be congratulated on the importance given to the treatment of the non-classified chest pain and emphasis on the fact that it is not a routine practice to classify chest pain. This is one example of a study conducted in the
