Silent Depth 3D Submarine Simulation aÅ . Silent Depth 3D Submarine Simulation aÅ .Q: How do I create a function that can add to another function's params? I am trying to create a function that gets the data, then returns a function that finds a match in the database. After doing some research I learned that the javascript functions can have parameters. According to this link, I understand how to do it using function foo(name) { return function bar(a, b) { // do stuff } } const f = foo('foo'); f(42, 'bar'); However, I was wondering if it is possible to create a function that takes the same parameters the function (in this example the foo function has 2 parameters) and adds one to the end. This is what I tried and did not work: function find(name, text){ return function find(a, b){ // return stuff } } const f = find('foo', 42); console.log(f('foo', 'bar')) A: It depends on where you want to add the new argument. If you want to add the new argument to the parameters of foo, you need to return an object with all the original parameters and the new one. function foo(name) { return { name, bar: function(a, b) { // do stuff } } } const f = foo('foo'); f.bar('42', 'bar'); cancer drugs should be considered as potential therapeutic targets \{[@CR117], [@CR118]\}.
