A laboratory-scale thermogravitic distillation (TGD) unit has been developed to treat automotive catalytic converter waste with a view to both gaseous and liquid product generation from the gaseous fraction of the TGD product stream. The model waste consists of two different metal oxides (Co, Zn and Al) in a mixed oxide form, and three different carbon fuels (bunker, gas and diesel oil). The effectiveness of methane cracking and simultaneous transformation of the metals to a solid form was investigated. The reactor was operated with a maximum power of 240 W for 10 h and the light gas recovery was found to be approximately 80%. The energy consumption was calculated to be 19.4 MJ for 10 h. Following these results, the potential of the waste gases generated by the full-scale TGD units was assessed for the potential to be converted to a green fuel by an associated gasification and methanization process.Biological effects of androgens on the female and male pituitary. Androgens exert diverse biological effects on the endocrine system in women and men. In the female pituitary, androgens have positive effects on the somatotropic and gonadotropic axes and in women, also on the reproductive system. Androgens enhance the physiological inhibitory action of estrogens on gonadotropin secretion and exert a direct effect on the regulation of gonadotropin receptors. In the male pituitary, androgens are involved in the regulation of the hypothalamic-pituitary-testicular axis and indirectly in testosterone production. Androgen binding to and activation
