The novel A/California/07/2009 virus has generated interest because it shows no co-circulating characteristic of seasonal A/H1N1 strains and has displayed transmission in domestic birds as well as humans. The results of the clinical assessment of patients during the 2009 pandemic and the evaluation of viral neuraminidase activity should be interpreted with caution since the disease severity and viral pathogenicity of the novel virus might be different compared to the regular seasonal strains. What is Known: • The novelty of A/California/07/2009 virus stands in contrast with the previous seasonal strains. • The novel A/California/07/2009 virus shows high infection rate of 2–3% and high mortality of 10–20% in the severe cases. What is New: • The novel A/California/07/2009 virus shows high neuraminidase activity, which is similar to the regular seasonal A/H1N1 and A/H3N2 viruses. • The novel A/California/07/2009 virus shows high mortality rate, and the mortality rate is higher in the severe cases compared to the mild cases.Comparison of two industrial waste water treatment systems.
