The most useful lens distortion correction tool in Photoshop is the Lens Correction feature found under the Effects tab. This tool is great for correcting the severity of barrel and pincushion distortion in photos. We always recommend that you first apply an adjustment layer, such as Levels to correct any basic color problems that may already be present in your photograph. Adjustment layers add layers of corrections so that you can blend and combine the results of these adjustments into your final image. In other words, they allow you to create a "custom" look by blending one adjustment with another. This is extremely handy for editing contrast, sharpness, and brightness in an image. This is a tool that makes it very easy to edit cropped images or shapes. To edit the shape of the gradient in the Brush tool, simply click-and-drag with the mouse to modify the perimeter of the shape. When you've finished, click outside the shape to reset the gradient. The Brush tool lets you create a gradient directly on an image—no drawing necessary. Simply click-and-drag to brush a new gradient across your page. You can also control how long you brush, and the color space the gradient uses. You also have modifiers at your fingertips that control the size and opacity of the paint stroke you create. These are an extremely powerful tool for manipulating images and really make the Brush Brush tool a real time saver for editing in Photoshop. The Stylize filter blends the look of an image with your chosen style to expose the hidden layers of camera-created distortions present in your image. It's much faster than using the Lens Correction tool, like it is a one-button solution to reducing or removing optical effects from your images. 933d7f57e6
