Q: Customize the layout of JInternalFrame I'm trying to implement a window with 4 tabs and each tab should include a tree (customized to the client's needs). The tabs are also supposed to be JInternalFrame. I want a good looking tabs with a consistent look and feel for the whole application. I'm trying to implement it with some more than 10 JInternalFrame in each tab. I cannot make the tab size the same so I have some space to the left of the tab, which I'm trying to make invisible with setLeftComponent(null). It works when I add the components to the tab (either add them directly to the tab or setLeftComponent to the internal frame), but when I'm trying to remove them the internal frame get out of the tab, leaving a blank space. How can I achieve that? I'm trying to make it look like the tabs of Eclipse and NetBeans. Thanks in advance.

A: To remove the blank space just remove it. It's not good but at least this will be closer to the desired effect.

```
JTabbedPane pane = new JTabbedPane( JTabbedPane.TOP ); pane.addTab("Internal frame", yourInternalFrame );
pane.addTab("Another internal frame", yourInternalFrame2 );
pane.addTab("Another internal frame", yourInternalFrame3 );

3-step method to induce immune response to killed pneumococcal vaccines: an overview. One strategy for achieving protection against invasive pneumococcal disease (IPD) is the induction of a humoral immune response. Many adjuvants have been used to induce protection against IPD and some have been successfully tested in humans. This review examines the various routes of administration of the available vaccines and describes the key elements of the design of vaccine adjuvants that might be required to successfully deliver these vaccines to individuals who would benefit from protection.

Baghdad (IraqiNews.com) Two mortar shells fired by ISIS were shot down by Iraqi Armed Forces in al-Tahrir region of Salahuddin province. A security source said that two mortar shells were shot down by Iraqi Armed Forces personnel in the vicinity of Salahuddin. It was the fifth mortar shell fired by ISIS in Salahuddin province in the last 24 hours. Security sources told IraqiNews.com, on Saturday, that ISIS fighters used a bulldozer to cover up their positions in central al-Qaim region, northwest of al-Anbar province. They pointed out that the advancing of ISIS troops in al-Qaim was also accompanied by heavy air strikes by Iraqi warplanes. The invention relates to a method and device
