Why do most people pass their days in a dull haze, broken only by occasional outbursts of anger, food cravings, or a grab for the remote control? Why do they surrender their lives to the relentless search for material possessions? To find the answer to this question, we must ask another: Why is it that people are attached to nothing? Please understand that the words that follow will not be easy to read. We are about to embark on a journey into the dark side of our soul. The material world has a hypnotic hold over many people. We must try and understand why it has this power. This is a somewhat long read, but please be patient with us. The material world possesses the power to give us great joy. People who are enjoying themselves are the ones who are truly free. The Happiness Project Why do people, who are not enjoying themselves, spend so much time searching for possessions that will help to take their minds off their sadness and bring happiness to them? This is a universal question, because it touches on the very root of our humanity. Each person desires happiness in their life. Why do we want to add more happiness to our lives? The answer is simple: We want to be happy. The pursuit of happiness is not about possession, but rather about doing things that will bring joy to our lives. Our goal is to make our life as full of joy as possible. Can you imagine the impact this simple goal would have on the world? It would free people from wasting their lives in search of material possessions. Most people spend all day working to accumulate the possessions that will make their life more pleasurable. If we could find a way to make life more pleasurable for all of us, we would certainly all have more time. We would be free to make our life something that we are happy to wake up and go to bed to every day. We would be free to find a love that we would be happy to share with another person. Life would become more joyful if we could all share our lives with another person. Who would not want to be happy? Living With Nothing Now, we are going to explore how the material world affects our minds. People who live in the material world must struggle with what is called “f
